Mobilizing Philanthropy for a Nature-Positive Future

As biodiversity loss, climate change, and pollution accelerate globally, shifting geopolitical dynamics are putting reliable government and multilateral funding for conservation and climate action at risk. More than ever, philanthropy has a vital role to play in supporting and accelerating a just, nature-positive transition. The scale of the challenge is immense: meeting the Global Biodiversity Framework requires $1.3 trillion annually, yet less than 6% of philanthropic funding currently reaches environmental initiatives. The stakes could not be higher and philanthropy's agility and innovation are essential to closing the funding gap and driving systemic transformation.

To unlock real progress, we must forge new alliances and mobilize stakeholders to harness collective power at scale. Only then can we shape sustainable solutions grounded in nature-based innovations and scalable approaches that integrate social equity and conservation.

Financing these solutions demands a radical rethink of how capital flows. Philanthropy can lead the way by deploying catalytic and blended finance, venture philanthropy, and pooled funding, aligning public and private investments to unlock greater impact. Meanwhile, philanthropy also enables piloting and leveraging the transformative potential of technology to scale efforts ethically and inclusively—from AI-driven monitoring to open data platforms that empower communities and enhance transparency.

Set in the dynamic context of the IUCN World Conservation Congress, held under the patronage of H.H. Sheikh Mohamed bin Zayed Al Nahyan, the inaugural IUCN Philanthropy Summit offers a unique platform to mobilize philanthropic capital for a nature-positive future. Held under the patronage of H.H. Sheikh Theyab bin Mohamed bin Zayed Al Nahyan, Deputy Chairman of Presidential Court for Development and Martyrs' Families Affairs, Chairman of the Board of Trustees of Erth Zayed Philanthropies, Chairman of the International Humanitarian and Philanthropic Council, the Summit will convene an invite-only group of leaders ready to innovate, invest boldly, collaborate deeply, and accelerate outcome-focused action that delivers lasting benefits for people and planet alike.

Objectives of the IUCN Philanthropy Summit

- Unpack the connections between biodiversity loss, climate, food security, and health, as well as consider the drivers of biodiversity loss and how we can address these
- Explore the evolving role of philanthropy in solving systemic global challenges
- Build bridges between philanthropic capital and conservation opportunities
- Highlight nature as a high-impact solution for donors seeking lasting change
- Support IUCN's programme priorities across the Congress's five key themes
- Inspire ambitious philanthropic action at a decisive moment for the planet

From Margins to Mainstream: Reframing the Case for Conservation

Conservation now lies at the core of the global polycrisis, intersecting with climate instability, food and water security, health risks, and geopolitical volatility. This dialogue reframes conservation not as a niche or charitable pursuit, but as a vital, strategic investment in the long-term resilience of our planet and societies. It underscores the distinctive role philanthropists, guided by personal and family values, can play in tackling this urgent challenge. Today, we have the opportunity to envision the world we could create if we choose to act together, and act swiftly.

Aligning Business with Purpose: Corporate Philanthropy for Nature

Corporations are increasingly expected to go beyond compliance and traditional CSR by aligning their core business values with their philanthropic ambitions. By deploying capital strategically and leveraging their operational resources, businesses can support mission-driven causes that reflect both social responsibility and long-term business resilience. Corporate philanthropy can not only close gaps in conservation finance but also help redefine business models, and ultimately what it means for companies to create shared value for society, the environment, and their stakeholders.

SPEAKERS

Hatem Dowidar, Group CEO, e&, UAE
Sabrina Peng, Senior Vice President, Chief Sustainability Officer, Ant Group, China
Daniela Picco, Executive Director, MSC Foundation, Switzerland
Nathalie Sauvanet, Global Head, Philanthropy Solutions, BNP Paribas, France

Richard Sneider, Chairman and Principal, Earthbar LLC, USA

11:20 –11:35	Spotlight on Agents of Change Shared Stewardship: Creating Public Goods with a Private Sector Mindset

From national parks to community-managed areas, conservation landscapes are governed through a spectrum of models that reflect diverse ownership structures and legal frameworks. Yet as public budgets face mounting pressures, private capital is playing an increasingly pivotal role in sustaining and expanding protected areas, especially in regions where public funding is limited or unreliable. This spotlight highlights how philanthropic investors and business leaders are stepping in not only as funders, but as stewards, linking conservation to sustainable development, resilience, and long-term prosperity.

Humphrey Kariuki, Chair, Humphrey Kariuki Foundation, Kenya

Moderated by:

Lara Setrakian, Oped Columnist, Semafor Gulf, UAE

11:35 –12:10	Panel Discussion Cross-Sector Catalysts: Powering Inclusive Conservation

The climate, biodiversity, and inequality crises are deeply interlinked, with each intensifying the others, and cannot be solved in isolation. These overlapping challenges are especially acute in the Global South, where communities are on the front lines of both environmental degradation and systemic underinvestment. Tackling them requires intersectional approaches and better collaborative models. Building cross-sector, inclusive alliances with intention is critical to correcting these systemic failures and unlocking more equitable, lasting impact.

Philanthropy Powering our Circular Future
by Awqaf Abu Dhabi

Hosted by Awqaf Abu Dhabi, whose mission is to create long-term social and economic impact for current and future generations, this session will explore how philanthropy can catalyze the shift to a more circular and sustainable future. Philanthropy has a unique role to play in this transition. Nature as Infrastructure:
Unlocking Ecosystem Potential
Enabled by Erth Zayed Philanthropies

Ecosystems, much like physical infrastructure, need strategic investment and effective management to maintain their essential functions. However, obtaining funding can be challenging because the benefits of ecosystem preservation are often not immediately visible or tangible. Philanthropy has a crucial role to play in addressing this gap, providing the necessary resources and support to safeguard natural systems. By doing so, philanthropy can catalyze efforts for long-term environmental sustainability and resilience.

Trust at the Core:
Is Trust-Based Philanthropy for NatureConservation the Way Ahead?
by IUCN

Featuring testimonies from partners working at the frontlines of conservation and advancing trust-based philanthropy, this session will focus on trust-based philanthropy. Trust-based philanthropy emphasizes long-term, flexible support that enables local actors to test new ideas, adapt quickly, and pursue innovative approaches that traditional funding often constrains. With momentum building globally, this session will highlight live examples from leading funders and partners, and examine the principles that can guide a more inclusive and impactful future for conservation.

From Passion to Impact: Deploying Capital for Conservation

Philanthropy often begins with passion, but true impact comes when that passion is translated into strategic capital allocation capable of driving change at scale.As conservation needs grow ever more urgent and complex, individual funders alone cannot close the $700 billion biodiversity financing gap. What they can do is leveragea broad spectrum of tools, from financing to partnering. By deploying diverse financial instruments and approaches, philanthropists can transform conservation from fragmented projects into durable, systemic change.

The Multiplier Effect: Amplifying the Power of Philanthropic Investment

The global biodiversity financing gap, estimated at over $700 billion annually, highlights the urgent need to rethink how conservation and sustainability efforts are funded. Philanthropy has a unique opportunity to amplify every dollar invested by leveraging innovative finance tools such as catalytic capital, blended finance, and venture philanthropy to unlock larger pools of public and private investment. By inventing and testing new economic models that redefine nature as critical infrastructure, philanthropy can create fresh investment opportunities aligning financial returns with measurable environmental and social impact.

Tech for Nature, Tech for Good

The IUCN Red List of Threatened Species is one of the world's most trusted indicators of global biodiversity health. Developed over 60 years ago, it remains the most comprehensive and authoritative inventory of the conservation status and extinction risk of species worldwide. What was once a fully manual, peer-reviewed process can now be enhanced and accelerated through digital innovation, in partnership with tech leaders such as Ant Group, thereby helping conservationists respond faster to emerging threats.

Conservation in the Age of AI: Risks and Rewards

As climate and biodiversity pressures intensify, artificial intelligence and digital tools offer unprecedented potential to accelerate conservation. They can enhance ecosystem monitoring, predict environmental threats, and improve data-driven decision-making.
Yet these technologies also raise critical ethical, environmental, and social questions. The development and deployment of AI systems require energy-intensive infrastructure, carry risks of data bias, and may further marginalize local communities if not designed inclusively. From supporting open-source models to funding datasets designed for local communities and conservation experts, philanthropic actors can help scale AI solutions that center biodiversity, climate resilience, and justice. As digital infrastructure becomes part of conservation's foundation, now is the time to shape how it is used and who benefits.
